

BARCELONAFLOORS

If you walk around Barcelona, don't forget to look down from time to time: you may be standing on a marvel of design. "The City of Marvels" is how writer Eduardo Mendoza called the coolest city of the Mediterranean in one of his novels. The book is set at the turn of the 20th century, a time in which Barcelona boomed and became what it is today. A time in which factories' chimneys grew side by side with the Sagrada Familia's towers. That tumultuous era left its signature on thousands of floors in the city – one of its marvels.
